Hope-in Care provides Home Health Aides. When patients are confined to bed, as often occurs in the late stages of a terminal illness, they require special care. For example, assistance in moving to and from bed, bathing, dressing, changing bed linen, feeding, and toilet assistance are a few common needs. Home health aides are available to assist the family, or other caregiver, in providing personal care.

A companion can offer the first link to outside assistance for an elderly person. Services from Companions include an escort to and from appointments, assisting with all shopping and errands, light housekeeping and laundry, taking a patient out to dinner, social events, and much more.
